Providing a comprehensive range of counselling and support services for people affected by domestic and family violence within their families.

A range of individual and group support programs are offered in several regions to address and prevent family violence directed at ensuring everyone has the right to feel safe and free from abuse in their home - whether that abuse is physical abuse, verbal abuse, or any other behaviour that is controlling or coercive. The programs are designed for people experiencing violence - to help them towards safety, and for people who are committing these acts of abuse - to help them towards non-violence.

The programs offered include:

- Counselling and support for victims
- Refuge for women escaping domestic violence
- Men's perpetrator behaviours change
- Children's domestic and family violence counselling
- Call 1300 364 277 and we will arrange a face-to-face interview with a family violence prevention worker service.

For people who have experienced violence or abuse, or have committed violence and abuse and want to change, and for children who have witnessed violence or abuse.

- Assistance in better understanding the situation, and how to take the first steps towards change.
- Experience has taught us that groups of men and groups of women, working with a skilled and experienced worker, and a group of support which helps people to achieve long-term change in stopping violence in the relationship and promoting non-violence and respect.

Our first concern is always to make sure that everybody in their family is safe. Often it takes some time before change occurs. Our worker will talk about the groups we have available both for people who have been abused, and for people who have been abusive and want to change.
